New York State Guidance on Safeguarding the Rights of Immigrant Students

January 2025

The Office of the New York State Attorney General (OAG), the Office of New York Governor Kathy Hochul, and the New York State Education Department (SED) share a longstanding commitment to safeguarding the rights of all students, including all noncitizen students. Our offices have previously issued guidance to school districts and state agencies on several topics to ensure that New York's immigrant students have equal access to education and other public services.[1] In light of recent threats of increased federal immigration actions in our communities, we write to reaffirm that schools should remain a safe haven where all students are welcomed and provided a free public education.

This guidance highlights and clarifies relevant resources for school districts regarding their obligations under state and federal law. While the guidance does not address local policies that may afford additional protections, school districts should be aware of all policies governing their operations. To the extent questions arise regarding compliance, we encourage school districts to contact SED and OAG.[2]

I. Enrollment and Registration Requirements

Under New York law, all children ages 5 to 21 who have not received a high school diploma are entitled to a free public education in the district in which they live.[3] School districts may not refuse admission based on national origin, immigration status, race, or language proficiency, among other grounds.[4] The U.S. Supreme Court has likewise long held that students may not be denied a free public education based on their immigration status or that of their parents or guardians.[5] School policies that thwart equal access to education may expose districts to legal liability and undermine school communities.

To ensure all students are welcome in New York schools, we remind school districts that they must not erect discriminatory barriers to enrollment or otherwise discourage immigrant students from registering.[6] Schools must therefore consider various proofs of residency in a district and make publicly available a non-exhaustive list of acceptable forms of documentation.[7] Schools are also prohibited from requesting a Social Security Card or number, or any information that would reveal immigration status at the time of enrollment.[8] And schools must immediately enroll migrant and unhoused students even if they lack proof of residency, immunizations, school records, or other documents typically required for registration.[9] For additional guidance on state and federal obligations with respect to enrollment and registration, school districts are encouraged to consult our 2023 Joint Enrollment Guidance.[10]

Moreover, the federal McKinney-Vento Homeless Assistance Act, as well as New York's Education Law and implementing regulations, create an affirmative obligation for school districts to provide access to education for students who are experiencing homelessness or living in temporary housing, including migrant shelters.[11] Our 2021 Joint McKinney-Vento Guidance elaborates on how school districts should fulfill their legal duties to meet the needs of students experiencing homelessness.[12] It underscores that such students have a right to immediate enrollment, either at their school of origin or current location, regardless of whether they are in the same district.[13] Schools are responsible for outreach to identify homeless children and youth who need assistance and must also generally provide transportation to and from a student's temporary housing location.[14] For additional resources regarding implementing the McKinney-Vento Act and supporting students experiencing homelessness, school districts are encouraged to contact the New York State Technical and Education Assistance Center for Homeless Students (NYS-TEACHS).[15]

II. Collecting Student Information and Accessing Student Records

Federal and State law, primarily the Family Education and Privacy Rights Act of 1974 (FERPA), generally prevent the disclosure of personally identifiable information (PII) without parental consent.[16] As applicable here, schools can only release PII if it constitutes directory information or is being provided in response to a "judicial order or lawfully issued subpoena."[17] Directory information includes information such as a student's name, address, and telephone number.[18] It does not include immigration status, citizenship, or national origin information or documentation, and schools should not affirmatively seek to collect this information unless required to do so. If such information is necessary for specific program participation or reporting requirements, it should be collected after the enrollment process and anonymized wherever possible. Subject to the above exception for a judicial order or lawfully issued subpoena,[19] schools are not required to provide student information to federal or local law enforcement officials.[20]

FERPA also prohibits schools from disclosing records with information about students' immigration status to School Resource Officers (SRO) without the prior consent of a parent, guardian, or nonminor student, except under certain circumstances where SROs are considered school officials.[21] Even then, SROs may only use PII from education records for the legitimate educational purpose for which the information was sought—that is, to promote school safety and physical security of students. Our offices reiterate that immigration status information does not serve such school safety objectives or legitimate educational purposes. SROs should thus not examine a student's school records for immigration status information.[22] Moreover, SROs' disclosure of such information could also violate FERPA's limitations on disclosure and re-disclosure of PII from education records.[23]

If a federal or local law enforcement official requests student information, a school should not disclose the information and should instead request the subpoena or other documentation upon which the request is based. Upon receipt thereof, the school should contact their attorney before disclosing any student information.[24] Schools should inform SED's Privacy Office of any such request.[25]

In addition, we recommend that school districts:

» Review their directory information policies to ensure that they do not include information that may inadvertently disclose a student's immigration status. This may include place of birth, nationality, or passport information.[26] Moreover, the directory information exception is permissive and may only include information that "would not generally be considered harmful or an invasion of privacy if disclosed."[27] School districts may also wish to implement a limited directory information policy that allows an educational agency "to limit its directory designation to specific parties, for specific purposes, or both."[28] Furthermore, parents and students have the right to opt-out of disclosure of directory information by requesting a directory information opt-out form from their school;[29]

» Reissue the district's annual FERPA notice informing parents and guardians (if any) of their right to opt-out of the district's directory information policy, translated into the predominant home languages of students within the district, if possible;[30]

» Immediately notify parents or guardians (if any) if federal or local law enforcement officials have requested their child's information;[31] and

» Review current information collected to determine whether such information could unnecessarily disclose a student or parent's immigration status and whether collection of the information is required.

Under State law, students and families may file complaints regarding the unauthorized disclosure of PII with SED's Privacy Office.[32]

III. Law Enforcement's Detention, Interrogation, or Removal of Students from School Property

Various federal and state laws, including the New York Education Law, New York Family Court Act, and the U.S. Supreme Court's decision in Plyler v. Doe, impose duties on school districts with respect to detention, interrogation, and removal of students from school property. A breach of such duties may expose school districts to liability. Our agencies therefore reiterate and clarify our 2017 and 2019 Joint Immigration Education Guidance to school districts regarding the legal obligations and procedures to follow in the event that law enforcement officers seek access to a student.[33]

As an initial matter, we reaffirm SED's longstanding position that law enforcement officers may not remove a student from school property or interrogate a student without the consent of the student's parent or person in parental relation, except in the limited circumstances explained below.[34] Moreover, New York State Executive Order 170.1 provides that civil arrests by federal immigration authorities may only be executed within state facilities, such as schools, when accompanied by a judicial warrant or order authorizing the custody unless the civil arrest is related to a proceeding within the facility.[35] When presented with a request from a federal or local law enforcement official (including SROs) to detain or interrogate a student, school personnel—in service of their role as educators of all—should consider the following:

(1) Do not allow officers inside school property to access a student, except to address an imminent safety situation or where required by law due to a judicial warrant or order;

(2) Remember that there are a variety of forms of documentation that an officer may present, not all of which are legally sufficient to justify turning over records or grant access to a student. You should request documentation from the officer. Such documentation may take various forms, including:

a. Judicial warrant or order: A judicial warrant or order is signed by a United States District Judge or federal Magistrate Judge and demonstrates probable cause to believe an individual has committed a crime or offense.

b. Administrative warrant: An administrative warrant is prepared and issued by federal immigration authorities and directs federal officials to arrest a noncitizen for removal or removal proceedings.[36] It is not a judicial warrant and does not provide probable cause to believe an individual has committed a crime or offense since, as a general rule, it is not a crime for an undocumented individual to remain present in the United States.[37]

c. Immigration "detainer": An immigration detainer is a request, typically issued by federal immigration authorities to local law enforcement agencies, to keep an individual in custody for up to 48 hours beyond when the individual is scheduled for release. It provides federal authorities with additional time to determine whether to take custody of the individual to pursue civil immigration enforcement proceedings.[38]

(3) Before taking any other action, provide the superintendent and school district attorney with the documentation, which they will assess in the context of the law enforcement request, and await guidance before proceeding; and

(4) Immediately notify the student's parent or guardian (if any) unless specifically prohibited (for example, by a judicial order).

Our 2019 Joint Immigration Education Guidance also clarified the duty of school districts to ensure that SROs uphold undocumented students' right to attend school without fear of adverse immigration consequences.[39] We remind school districts that SROs shall not detain or interrogate students to determine their immigration status. The Fourth Amendment prohibits SROs from detaining or questioning a student unless the SRO has reasonable suspicion that the student has violated school policy or committed an illegal act that threatened the "special needs of school safety."[40] Such actions only should be undertaken under the direction of a school official, and only to investigate the suspected policy violation or illegal act.[41] A student's immigration status does not implicate school safety or school policy, and will never justify a detention or interrogation on school grounds.[42]

Indeed, such unlawful practices, when predicated on a student's perceived race, ethnicity, national origin, citizenship, or immigration status, may also violate the state Constitution and various state and federal civil rights laws.[43] School districts that allow SROs to violate these legal protections risk liability for failing to adequately train and supervise the SROs in their schools.[44]

Under New York Education Law, school districts that employ SROs must formally define their roles and areas of responsibility through a written contract or memorandum of understanding (MOU) developed with stakeholder input.[45] Our offices advise school districts to incorporate policies and procedures to safeguard the rights of undocumented students into their contracts or memoranda of understanding with SROs,[46] including:

(1) Clearly defined restrictions on SROs' ability to access and redisclose student records containing information that might reveal a student's immigration status. This includes whether SROs are "school officials" entitled to access student records;

(2) Policies prohibiting SROs from questioning students and students' family members about their immigration status;

(3) A commitment from SROs and school personnel not to share information about the actual or perceived immigration status of students or their family members with immigration authorities, unless required to do so by law;[47]

(4) Policies prohibiting SROs from detaining students at the request of immigration authorities, making arrests based on civil immigration warrants, responding to notification or transfer requests from immigration authorities, or otherwise using campus facilities for any immigration enforcement purposes, unless required to do so by law; and

(5) A requirement that all SROs consult with the superintendent or other designated school officer before deviating from the preceding safeguards.

IV. Bullying and Harassment

New York and federal law prohibit harassment and bullying by students or employees based on actual or perceived race, color, national origin, ethnic group, and citizenship or immigration status, among other grounds.[48] School districts are encouraged to consult our agencies' prior guidance and resources on the Dignity for All Students Act to understand their legal duty to create a school environment free from harassment and bullying.[49] These obligations include: developing policies for responding to such behavior; training staff on the district's policies and incorporating them into the district's code of conduct; providing students with instruction that discourages bullying, harassment, and discrimination; and reporting incidents to SED.[50]

In addition, New York law prohibits targeting a person or their property for violence, threats, or harassment because of a person's race, color, national origin, ancestry, gender, religion, age, disability, or sexual orientation.[51] The OAG Hate Crimes and Bias Prevention Unit can launch non-criminal investigations of violations of that law and can provide related resources to school districts.[52]

V. Detention or Deportation of Student Family Members

Students—regardless of immigration status—may have parents, guardians, or other family members who have been detained or deported. School districts are encouraged to ensure that all students and their families provide updated emergency contact information, including secondary emergency contacts. This can be particularly important in the event that immigration enforcement affects a parent or guardian's ability to provide care. School districts may also share information about relevant legal and community resources with students and their families, including those provided in the Appendix.

19. As explained in the 2017 Joint Immigration Education Guidance, supra note 1, limited exceptions to the FERPA nondisclosure rule exist as set forth in the law's implementing regulations. These exceptions include requests made by specifically enumerated individuals of the federal government, but only "in connection with an audit or evaluation of Federal or State supported education programs, or for the enforcement of or compliance with Federal legal requirements that relate to those programs," and all PII must be protected "from further disclosures or other uses," 34 C.F.R. § 99.35(a). Further, a request from ICE or other federal immigration officials to access student PII from education records would not appear to satisfy any of the FERPA exceptions to the general rule that a parent or eligible student must consent to disclosures to third parties.

20. As explained in Section III, school officials should not allow federal and local law enforcement officials to remove students from the school environment for questioning. Additionally, SROs should not assist federal law enforcement officials in immigration enforcement except in the narrow and rare circumstance where there is a formal agreement between the county employing the SRO and ICE lawfully providing the authority to do so.
